SMITH

No grant of the arms borne by the family can be found. There was a grant to George Smith in 1590, but who he was or whether he was the Sir George Smith of Exeter the Herald's cannot say. Assuming that they are right then no member of the family has any claim to the right of arms save the descendents of Sir George Smith. ~~The Rt. Hon. Gov. Landgrave Smith could not have used arms illegaly.~~

Assuming there was no grant the Antiquity of The arms borne by the family would be proved by the way in which they are recorded in the visitation of Devon in 1619. They are recorded as being the arms belonging to the family "by prescription, that is, by immemorial use."

Semper Fidelis - Motto of the city of Exeter. Arms were probably given by Edward IV to Robt. Smith.

These arms are painted on the South Wall of the Exeter Cathedral under one of the aisle window, also in the Middle Temple Hall in behalf of Sir Nicholas Smith, Acct. Gen., Court of Chancery, in Lord Eldon's time. Continuously used by many distant branches of the family with small variations.
