time presented a memorial to the King, in which they stated that twelve months before they had proposed to surrender to his Majesty all interest in the province for the sum of £25,000, that they had laid their title before the Attorney and Solicitor General, and a conveyance was thereon proposed with a covenant that they should consent to an act of Parliament authorizing the sale, and had been in daily expectation of having the surrender accepted, but were surprised to hear that this could not be done without an act first obtained. They complained of being detained in town waiting the action of the government, and of the injury to the colony through the delay, and prayed his Majesty either to direct an immediate surrender or to allow them the full and free exercise of the power under the charter granted them by King Charles II.¹

Upon the application of Thomas Kimberley of the Middle Temple for the appointment of Chief Justice, the Proprietors had agreed to give it to him, and on the 9th of February, 1724-25, had signed a commission for him as such.² But on the 10th of March, 1726-27, they recommend to his Majesty that Colonel Samuel Horsey be made Governor, Mr. Thomas Kimberley Attorney General, Mr. Robert Wright Chief Justice, and Mr. James Stanway Naval Officer, and their recommendation is taken into consideration by his Majesty's government.³ Colonel Horsey is consulted in June, 1727, by Lord Westmoreland, one of the Lords Justices, upon the subject of the appointment of a regular Governor, and is again pressed by the Proprietors for the position as late as April 28, 1728.¹ Colonel Horsey and Mr. Thomas Lowndes appear to have been the agents of the Proprietors in the negotiations with the Royal government for the surrender of their charter, and on March 30, 1726, the Proprietors agree to make Colonel Horsey a Landgrave of Carolina, annexing thereto four baronies of twelve thousand acres each.² In July following Mr. Lowndes purchased a Landgraveship and is made Provost Marshal under the Proprietors.³ Mr. Yonge, the agent of South Carolina under the Provisional government, learning of the recommendation of Colonel Horsey by the Proprietors, presents a memorial against it, alleging that the inhabitants will speedily fall into the same commotions again if the Proprietors be allowed to elect the Governor.⁴ The uncertainty of affairs under the Provisional government was in every way injurious, and, at length satisfied that they would never be allowed to resume their government of the colony, the Proprietors, on the 31st of May, 1727, petition the King, George I., to take the supreme sovereignty of the province into his own hands.⁵ King George I. did not receive this petition. He died before it reached England, and it was left to his successor, King George II., to act upon it.

Governor Nicholson had returned home charged with many complaints of the inhabitants. Mr. Middleton, who succeeded him in the administration, was to give still less satisfaction. Hewatt gives this character of Mr. Middleton. Mr. Middleton, he says, though of a reserved disposition, was a sensible man and by no means ill qualified for governing the province. But having succeeded a man who liberally spent all his salary for the public
