

Broughton

The following is taken from a Sketch —

"The name + Family - Broughton"

By Henry E. Wate, Esq.

Hest Newton - Mass.

With few exceptions all the families that have borne the name in England are traced to the Counties of Chester + Buckingham. The name continued prominent among the knights + sheriffs of England for three or four centuries until the titular male lines became extinct + their estates passed through females heirs to other families.

Note at foot of page! — In county of Chester the "Broughtons" descend in male line from Hugh de Vernon, baron of Shipbrook at time of the Conquest whose 4th son, Richard de Vernon was father of Adam de Waston, County of Warwick, whose issue assumed their local name from "Broughton" in Staffordshire.

In the county of Buckingham, at Domesday, survey the principal manor of Broughton was —

no 2

held by Walter Giffard, Earl of Buckingham & Cousin of the "Conqueror", His subfeudatory was Hugo de Balbec? whose Descendants -
the Veris - Earls of Oxford continued to hold it admitting under them another subfeudatory - supposedly to have been a junior branch of the same family who took the name from the place before the year 1200!! (See Armond's Cheshire; Slidon's Staffordshire; Ellis' Antiquities
of Heraldry; Burke's Peerage, etc)

The name + Family - Broughton -

by Henry E. Waite Esq. of West Newton Mass.
The New England Historical & Genealogical
Register - on Pages 298. + 299 Year 1883

The name is derived from the Saxon "Broc"
which means brook or broken land + "Tane"
the dwelling or town.

In King Ethelred's Charter to the monastery of Shaftesbury in England A.D. 1001 Elfric's boundaries at "Broctum" are mentioned.

The Domesday Book of War. the Conqueror
A.D. 1086 describes 34 manors of "Broctum" variously latinized by the clerks of the records to: Bratton, Broton, Brothen, Bropton, & Broughton perhaps according to the pronunciation peculiar to the localities where the manors were located. Later the orthography of: - Broughton - seems to have been generally adopted -
